Another Long Nixon-Chou Session Spurs Rumors of Cultural Accord

By Max Frankel

PEKING, Feb. 23 (NYT) -President Nixon and Premier Chou En-lai logged another four hours of private conversation today, sorting out their views of the world and working toward what both sides have said will be a sustained program of conacts in different fields between the peoples of the two countries. It was the second consecutive day that the President and Mr. Chou conferred for four hours. Today's session, also attended by seven other officials and two interpreters, was followed by yet another kind of social experience bere-Mr. Chou's display of bis guests before 18,000 spectators in the indoor Capital Stadium. The White House had no comment on a story today by United Press International that the conferees had elready reached "tentative" agreement on exchanges of tourists, cultural attractions, students and news bureaus. There has never been much doubt since the President decided to come to China that some exchanges will ensue from these meetings, so officials could not directly deny the main drift of the report. But they said that no information about the President's conversations here this week could possibly have come from any reliable source. Whatever the basis of the reports now being written, a prediction of more trade, more tourists, more exchanges of scientists and students and cor-

U.S., Saigon End Boycott Of Paris Talks

PARIS, Feb. 23 (Reuters).—The U.S. and Saigon delegations to the Vietnam peace negotiations agreed today to resume the talks with Hanol and the Viet Cong tomorrow, following a week's suspension in protest against the holding of a leftist-dominated anti-war rally in Versailles.

They informed the Communist side of their decision today, six days after North Vietnam and the Viet Cong demanded that a new session be held tomorrow.

A spokesman for the U.S. delegation said: "In the expectation that the other side will be prepared to have a constructive exchange on our proposals as well as on theirs the kind of an exchange which the other side has thus far refused—we have agreed to their proposal for holding the 145th plenary session on Feb. 24." The Saigon delegation made a similar statement.

The United States and Saigon canceled last Thursday's meeting two weeks ago and gave no indications when they would resume the stalemated negotiations. Chief U.S. negotiator William J. Porter said earlier this month that the United States and Saigon would suspend the talks until they could "assess" the effects of the Versailles gathering on the peace negotiations.

The chances are that Mr. Nixon and Mr. Chou are concentrating not on the details of such exchanges but on how far they might go beyond people-to-people contact toward some kind of unofficial diplomatic dealing in the absence of embassies in each other's capital.

Beyond that, the talks must deal with the obstacle to those tinuing recognition of Talwan and China's claim to sovereignty over the island. But even this problem was explored in detail last year as is evident from the comments of both sides on the the President and the premier should now be embarked on a truly broad exchange of view-

Japan Increasingly Fearful Of China-U.S. Rapprochement

TOKYO, Feb. 23 (NYT) .-- Feelings of apprehension and even petulance are becoming evident among Japanese government officials as President Nixon and Chinese leaders exchange smiles each night on Japanese television

Any rapprochement between antagonists is welcomed in the interest of world peace. But Japan is wary of being upstaged as its major ally, the United States, seeks to improve relations with the People's Republic of China, Japan's major rival for influence China have been spurned.

Tokyo would be unimpaired. Premier Eisaku Sato, who has let himself express little more than "disappointment" over the manner of Washington's abrupt moves on China and trade, was in a peevish mood while watching live television coverage of the President's Peking arrival Monday. Domestic Politics Much of the apprehension over the Peking visit is thus tied up with Japanese domestic politics and the leadership of the next

But there are other factors, One is the fear that the United States might take advantage of the President's visit to crowd Japan's position as China's natural trade partner. Another is the vague fear that the mutual security treaty between Japan and the United States might be weakened to appease Peking or that China might be courted as a future counterweight to Japanese ambitions in Asia.

MPs Rush Law To Justify Army Actions in Ulster

By Anthony Lewis

LONDON, Feb. 23 (NYT).-A Northern Ireland court decision today threw doubt on the power of British soldiers in Ulster, and bere in London Parliament took urgent action to undo the decision. The High Court of Northern Ireland ruled this morning that a regulation empowering army officers to make gatherings of people disperse was invalid. Its reasoning also affected army power to search, enter homes and make arrests without warrant.

The court found that all these activities, authorized by the provincial government at Stormont, conflict with Ulster's basic charvincial government at Stormont, conflict with Ulster's basic charter. That is a 1920 British law, the Government of Ireland Act.

The 1920 act specifies that the rights given to the provincial government do not include any power to legislate "in respect of the armed forces." This was the clause that the Ulster court found controlling

An English High Court judge rejected the same argument just last summer. Thus, in ordinary circumstances, the government would have appealed today's decision—to the highest court of Britain, the House of Lords.

But Prime Minister Edward. But Prime Minister Edward Heath and his government feared that chaos would set in in the be-

For example, anyone arrested by the army over recent months could have sued Homa Secretary Reginald Mauding therefore asked the House of Commons today to act at once on a short bill in effect reversing the court's interpretation of law. He said it was clearly a matter of great uncertainty.

Ordinarity Parliament takes months to consider any bill. It must have a second reading in the Houses of Commons and Lords—the vote in principle— and then go through a careful committee stage.

But all that can be suspended But all that can be suspended in emergencies, and the process went into action tonight. The two houses were prepared to sit through the night if necessary to complete action on all stages of the bill.

At least four passersby had smiles for the photographer, in this case Horst Faas, yesterday as the first flakes of a snowfall began to drop on Peking. Earlier, while a pale winter sun could still cast a weak shadow, a woman and her two children were photographed coming out of an apparently well-stocked food store. And the corner policeman drew a suspicious look from a passing woman who was typically dressed in the padded cotton "uniform" and cap.

China's Warmth Toward Visit May Reflect Internal Politics

By Max Frankel

PEKING, Feb. 23 (NYT).—The have always been associated with extraordinary publicity that the orderly industrial development Chinese authorities are suddenly giving to President Nixon's visit spectacular and significant in itself. But crucial questions are left manswered: Whet motivesdomestic as well as diplomaticprompted the Peking government to such an elaborate display of its new and still shapeless relationsnip with the United States? What hopes enthusiarms and policy expectations lay behind the public's enormous curiosity?

For a time Monday, it appear ed that the events here might prove to be secondary to the propaganda consequences abroad. Much of the world was watching on television as the President and his hosts clinked glasses merrily and celebrated each other's good intentions. But the Chicese people were told virtually nothing except that the President had wanted to come and that Chairman Mao Tse-tung had courteeusly agreed. The studied cool-ness of the initial reception only reinforced that tone.

But now that has changed, to the point where it seems no longer sufficient to suggest that the Chinese leaders were content to use this event for their purposes abroad—to undermine still further the claims of independence by the Chinese Nationalists on Taiwan and to cause their rivals in the Soviet Union further anxiety about the new Peking-Washington relationship!

Special Implications

There is nothing unalterable in China, of course, about the proclamation of the new line of cordiality toward the United States. It could change in an instant, as it has before. But the new line, after decades of fairly steady hostility, cannot fall to have special connotations and conse-

The commotion in the streetswhere the official newspaper. People's Daily, was sold out in two hours—was probably the least of these consequences. A far more important one is the implied boast that China's new flexibility in international affairs is bringing results and credit opon the conspicuous manager of that flexibility and the author of the principles of coexistence, Premier Chon En-lai. Here is an indication, also, that the zenophobia brought in by the tumultuous Cultural Revolution may be ended. What develops now will not soon resemble a Soviet-style "thaw," but there are undoubtedly important segments of Chinese society that count beavily upon cultural, scientific and intellectual exchanges with the West, and notably with the United Sates.

And, at the least, the investments made in the reception for Mr. Nixon by the Chinese represent formal notice that the Unit-Peking's principal enemy—ceased perhaps to be an enemy at all

That leaves the Soviet Union as the main menace in the Chinese outlook. It can also have the effect of signifying a major change in the investment of scarce resources away from the Chinese Navy and Air Force, which have clamored for the most advanced weapons and technologies to prepare themselves against the United States, and toward the army and more conventional heavy industry, which are needed for an effective de-Ionse against the Russians.

As far as outsiders have been able to determine, the struggle over investments in China, as in the Soviet Union, is intimately related to the struggles for political power.

It is Mr. Chou and the army generals and the elders of the

Hughes Reportedly Agrees To an Authorized Biography

By Wallace Turner

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 23 (NYT).-Howard Bughes has accepted the urging of some of his most trusted employees and agreed rejuctantly thet an au-thorized biography of him be prepared under their direction, a Hughes Tool Co. source said yes-

Mr. Bughes's motivation for the out-of-character decision to talk about himself was his ob-jections to the purported "auto-hiography" that was hought from Citiford Irving by McGraw-Hill Inc. His employees have told him that an authorized biography would help to stop such things from happening, the source said. He also has become disturbed by disclosures that 33-year-old Noah Districh soon will publish a book based on his recollections of his 32 years as chief executive officer of the Hughes enterprises. Because of Mr. Hughes's some-times erratic behavior where pub-licity about him is concerned, it is not thought to be entirely cer-tain that he will allow his em-ployees to publish their biography of him, even after agreeing that they can go ahead with it. He has fought hard over the years to prevent hiographies of him from being published.

Communists Stage 37 More Attacks

SAIGON, Feb. 23 (AP).—The Saigon Command reported today 37 more attacks across South Vietnam against government Vietnam against coverament forces, and Communist forces shelled the big U.S. Army support command in the central coastal city of Qui Nhon, wounding four Americans.

Most of the attacks appeared to be small-scale, hit-and-run raids and about half of them were by rockets and mortars, which has been the pattern since the latest surge of Communist activity

Saigon Bars Former General Seeking to End His Exile

SAIGON, Feb. 23 (NYT).-A former top South Vietnamese anti-government Buddhists was barred from returning from exile in the United States today because President Nguyen Van Thieu apparently feared that he might become a focus for increased opposition. Lt. Gen. Nguyen Chanh Thi, the popular former commander of Northern Military Region I, whose ouster touched off the Buddhist riots of 1966, was forbidden by the chief of the Saigon police to disembark from the Pan American Boeing-747 jumbo jet that had brought him from San

The police chief, Trang Si Tan. then ordered the Pan American plane to take off shead of schedule with only Gen. Thi as a passenger, leaving behind 189 American soldiers who were to have gone home on leave. The order barring Gen. Thi

Mr. Thi had been living in exile in Washington for six years. He had been forced out of the country by Nguyen Cao Ky, then premier, when pro-Buddhist students and troops used his removal from office as corps commander as a pretext to begin massive anti-government demonstrations in the spring of 1966, A group of 50 friends and sup-porters of Mr. Thi-who waited

Official Secrets

At least three times in the past year the administration has suffered the embarrassment of unintended leaks of classified information. Intended leaks are a commonplace—a form of standard operating procedure. Nothing but embarrassment, however, was entailed in the publication of files stolen from the Media, Pa, office of the FBL or in the publication of the so-called Pentagon Papers, or in the publication of some reports of National Security Council sessions obtained and made public by columnist Jack Anderson. When we say "nothing but embarrassment" we mean: no irreparable injury to the country's security, no loss of human life, no disclosure of vital facts such as the sailing of transports or the location of troops. Nevertheless, it is easy to understand why the administration was embarrassed and why it would have preferred to keep these documents securely locked up in its own file cabinets. In fact, a great deal of what goes on in the executive agencies of the government is wisely and properly kept secret. No one with any practical sense would suggest that cabinet meetings ought to be conducted on television or that the Pentagon publish all its war plans or that the Secretary of State's talks with ambassadors be made known to all the world. Confidentiality is a key to many kinds of policy planning, many kinds of contingency preparation, many kinds of difficult and delicate negotiation.

Nevertheless, the first responsibility for the preservation of government secrets is clearly the government's. And clearly the government isn't discharging it very well. Thanks to yet another unofficial leak, this newspaper published the other day (IHT Feb. 12) an account of the final draft of a proposed revision of the executive order establishing security classification procedures. It would prescribe, among other things, new standards for classification and declassification of government information.

We have no quarrel with the proposed measures for tightening the physical safeguards for preserving official documents. And we are in full accord with the philosophy of the proposal's opening statement: "It is essential that the citizens of the United States be informed to the maximum extent possible concerning the activities of their government. In order that it may protect itself and its citizens against hostile action, overt or covert, and may effectively carry out its foreign policy and conduct diplomatic relations with all nations, it is equally essential for their government to protect certain official information against unauthorized disciosure."

One proposal tentatively pnt forward in the draft seems to us, however, to be fraught with danger to self-government. Existing law makes it a criminal offense for any government employee or official to disclose classified information to a foreign agent; the proposal would make it a crime to disclose classified material to any unauthorized person, if the classification was "secret" or "top secret." In addition, it is suggested that legislation be enacted in imitation of the British Official Secrets Act, which would impose criminal penalties not only on the government employee who divulges classified information but on the recipient of the information as well. That seems pretty plainly aimed at newspapers.

But newspapers in America are not agents, or even allies, of the government. They are, by specific provision of a written constitution_something England doesn't havewholly independent of governmental regulation, precisely in order to enable them to serve, in Justice Hngo Black's splendid phrase, the governed, not the governors. If they are to do this effectively, they must be free to publish, within the limits of their knowledge, what they believe the public ought to know. The very essence of press freedom, it seems to us, lies in leaving the determination of what to publish to editors, when information becomes available to them. rather than to government officials.

Under American law, the press may not publish with perfect impunity. It may be called to account and punished for publishing official information if it does so with reason to believe that the publication will do injury to the United States. But this is a standard which imposes on the government, before publication can be punished, the burden of proving injury-not merely embarrassment-and of proving intent. Thus a free press is left free, if its editore and publishers have the courage of their convictions, to publish what they think the public ought to know.

There are risks in this system—as there are risks in all forms of freedom. But these are risks that a self-governing society must run if it wants to be informed, in spite of official classification, of corrupt deals like the Teapot Dome oil leases or the fact that government agents are maintaining surveillance of persons not charged with, or even suspected of, any violation of law, or the deliberate manipulation of public opinion to take the country into war. Official secrets are sometimes disclosed because someone inside the government regards it as his patriotic duty to make the information available to a free press, some ramifications of which are discussed by Kenneth Crawford elsewhere on this page. But to foreclose the publication of euch information, when it is not actually injurious to the nation, is to foreclose an essential means of keeping control of the government in the hands of

Broken Ice

A journalistic surprise has taken place in the Chinese People's Republic. The official dally Jenmin Jih Pao devoted its entire first two pages to President Nixon's visit. It published a picture of him shaking hands with Chairman Mao Tse-tung, as well as the texts of the Nixon and Chou En-lai speeches at Monday's banquet, and many other pictures and details about the visit hitherto available only to the ontside world.

And so, for the first time in decades, the traditional Chinese image of the United States as a beiligerently malevolent imperialist foe was replaced, if only for a day, by the picture of a smiling American President extending his hand in friendship to Chairman Mao, and by implication to the Chinese people. Undoubtedly many Chinese are puzzled by the new evidence of cordiality, but ice has been broken, and the atmosphere surrounding the Nixon visit has suddenly become warmer.

While the deep-seated differences between the United States and the Chinese People's Republic are far from resolved and are in fact unlikely to be resolved soon, Sino-American relatione are friendlier today than at any time since the founding of the Chinese People's Republic in 1949. The way bas been smoothed for agreement to cooperate in areas of common interest. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Bloody Tuesday

Violent extremism is the worst enemy of even the noblest causes, as the latest "trinmph" of the Irish Republican Army reemphasizes.

In Dublin the leftist official wing of the IRA on Tuesday boasted that a bomb blast at a British Army base in Aidershot, which killed seven persons, was a "successful retaliatory operation" for Londonderry's "Bloody Sunday." The victims of this outrage included six civilians-five of them womanand a Roman Catholic chaplain who had been decorated for risking hie life working for peace in Northern Ireland.

Such deeds of blind vengeance will never unite Ireland. They can only divide, degrade and betray the very cause in whose name they are committed.

Secrecy Leaks and Conducting Diplomacy

All this exposure violates a sacred traditio of international diplomacy. President Woodrow Wilson talked about open covenants openly arrived at, but this was a political slogan tarnished almost as soon as it was minted.: Secrecy has always been the way of the diplomat when important issues were under negotiation and even, at times, after they were resolved. It used to be taken for granted that almost every publicly announced treaty dangled secret commit-

Frankness

What this does to the business of conducting the country's foreign affairs is a question -perhaps an important question. President Nixon is involved in negotiations not only with the North Vietnamese and the Vict Cong but with the Chinese this week, and with the Russians, the Japanese, the Europeans and countless other nations on a continuing basis. Presumably the success of all these encounters will depend, in part at least, upon the frankness of the talk on both sides. And the degree of frankness will depend, in turn, upon confidence or lack of confidence that what is said will not become public

How frank does Chou En-lai, for example, feel that be can be with Mr. Nixon, knowing that what he says may soon be the subject of a column by Anderson, or even of a briefing, on or off the record, by presidential adviser Henry Kissinger? Maybe be will be no more guarded than be would be talking with, say, President Pompidou of France. But this is doubtful. The French still conduct their foreign affairs in the traditional fashion, as does almost everybody else.

The utility, some say necessity, for secrecy in the formulation of U.S. foreign policy was thoroughly hashed over in the course of Pentagon Papers flap. Washington Post, The New York

Tired Out

The Anderson Papers came and went without much controversy or challenge. This may have been because everybody was tired out by the hassle over the Pentagou Papers. Having learned from experience, the government made no effort to stop publication of the new documents or to deny their authenticity. Intelligence agencies tried to find the source of the leaks, apparently without much success, because almost everybody and his secretary with access to the papers also has access to dupli-cating machines. Now the government is giving away its own secrets, and that is a different matter, but it may be more dangerous than unauthoriz-ed leakage. President Nixon has unilaterally disclosed the details of secret negotiations with the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong. Kissinger has elaborated the President's reveletions both in one off-the-record and one onthe-record press conference, Communist spokesmen have called this a pernicious breach of faith.

The President's move would seem to be justified by the duplicity of the Vietnamese in publicly charging that the Nixon administration had never made the proposals it in fact had made in private. Since the North Victnamese seem to have no in-tention of substituting negotiation in good faith for the pursuit of military victory, the tension created by the President'e dixlosure probably will do no immediate harm. even do some good. Yet the precedent could prove damaging in future negotiations with more willing and more

WASHINGTON.—It will be sur- to the anti-Vietnam Democratic prising if President Nixon or anybody else in his official or unofficial party comes back from China unaffected by their experiences in that country. For China has a way of making its visitors think about the organization and purposes of life, and comparisons, while odious, are unavoidable.

Much that one sees in China is obviously troubling and even hateful in American eyes. Here, one feels, is what Walter Lippmann calls "The ancient order of things when the whole of men's existence, their consciences, their science, their arts, their labor, and their integrity as individuals are at the disposition of the rulers of the state." tralism, of freedom and discipline, constitutes our democratic centralism ... Nobody in the President's party will have time to test these Com munist guidelines, but despite its authoritarian system China obviously has e manner, a purpose, and an ideal that touches something deep in the American spirit.

On the surface at least, both discipline and freedom are evident in China. It is no accident that Lin Piao, Chairman Mao's chosen constitutional successor, didn't show up for the talks, or that there were no crowds to greet Nixon at the Peking airport. Yet subordinate officials do talk up freely in China and the general atmosphere is certainly not one of a resentful or intimidated

The official Chinese manner toward Americans, unlike contentious attitudes of the Korean talks, is correct, calm, and patient. Chou En-lai, with his cool, straight eyes, talks not only about . China and the United States, but about centuries and dvilizations and the future of the human family.

The Chinese purpose is plain enough. Chou En-lat didn't invite Nixon to Peking to conduct class in moral philosophy. He is concerned about the unity of his country (getting back Tai-WED); the security of his country. (the Soviet troops on his northern border and the American troops in Southeast Asia); the future of his country in relation to the rising power of Japan.

It is said that opposites attract, and this is undoubtedly true of Americans in China, if not the other way around. The Chinese ore so plain that they make us feel fancy, and even self-indulgent. There is no ostentation, even in the Great Hall of the People. Their noisy propaganda is even more irritating than our singing commercials, but there are no cosmetics, no conspicuous waste, no elaborate trash, and others the susterity of China must seem a relief. Certainly China does not fit our stereotypes of the flamboyant and inscrutable Orient, or Chairman Mao's warrior propaganda ebout all power coming out of the barrel of a gun.

All this sounded very ominous from far off, but once in China. it must be hard for Americans to think of any people with more preoccupying problems at home or of any soldiers who look less like invading conquerors than the Chinese.

Compulsive Virtue

It is odd that our young "Maoista" in the United States concentrate on the violence and ignore the virtue in the Mao cult. It is, to be sure, virtue by compulsion, and it is a revolutionary creed, but it is only in China that one realizes wby they emphasize that they are seeking a "cultural" revolution a philosophical ideal that will destroy the acquisitive materialism of the The Chinese do not deny that there is a great confrontation in the world between the United States and China, but they see it, not as a confrontation of armles and military power, but as a "confrontation of societies," of ways of life, and they believe that their system of democratic centralism will in the end prevail. For they do not believe in the natural goodness of man, they do not believe that the free societies

Personal Diplomacy In Peking

By William F. Buckley

DEKING.—At the banque! I saw personal diplomacy, and I say it won't work. But let it be said that Richard Nixon tried. Everyone could see him in the large banquet hall, but I saw him no: alone from the advantage of och ? seated only 20 yards away. I watched him through bineculars after his remarks, raising his glass to toast Chou En-lai and the three or four Chinese officials seated at his table.

Then—to the surprise of everyone and the consternation of the Secret Service—he strode purposefully to the three surrounding tables and there greated Chinese official after Chinese official, his face red with the sweat of quite genuine idealism, bowing, smiling warmly, touching each glass. He looked altogather noble, flushed with the righteousness of great purpose, and the two dozen Ch!nere-old generals, commissars, politicians—were quite visibly startled, first at being enproached at all, then at being woord so

Make no mistaka about the moral courage all this required. It is unreasonable to suppose that anywhere in history have a few dezen men congregated who have been responsible for greater human mayhem than the gentlemen at the banquet, instruments and mentors of Mao Tre-tung.

Slaughter Charged

We are in Peking, and among the pamphiets distributed to the American press is a speech by Mao Tre-tung less than two years old which (manifestly) has been neither withdrawn nor forgotten. While massacring the people in other countries,"—goes this par-ticular thought of Chairman Mao -'U.S. imperialism is slaughtering the white and black recole of its own country. Nixon's fascist atrocities have kindled the raging flames of the revolutionary mass movement in the United Steles. The Chinese people firmly support the revolutionary struggle of the American people. I am convinced that the American people who are fighting valiantly will ultimately win victory and that the fascist rule in the United States will inevitably be defeated."

Then there was the treatment of Nixon on his arrivel in China: The already femous airport reception, at which the guard of honor looked as though it was there to perform quarantine dut;. The motorcade through empty streets. If charity covers the big lie, here was the test. Mr. Nixon began his speech by thanking Premier Chou for his government's "incomparable bospitality." At the bands of an ironist, that stetement would have brought down the house. With Mr. Nixon, one merely scratches down the words on a pad, nervously. Mr. Nixon went on to do everything.

He quoted Mao. He said that he wished the United States and China might undertake a "long march" to-gether, which historical reference is like Chou saying that China wanted to stand side by side with America next time we face "the rockets' red glare."

And then . . . and then, he toested Chairman Mac. Chou Eniai, the whole lot of them. I woold not have been surprised if he had lurched into a toast of Alger Hiss.

Cautious Chou

Premier Chou was more centious. He had begun the dey with a snub, he would end it with condescension. He did not even sey that Nixon is a nice running dog. The stress, always, was: People to people, it being Com-munism's insistence that the American people are okay, but their leaders are awful, with something of a lacuna in their theory on how it is that okay people elect fascist, warmongering

There was not a word, in Chou's speech, which would have earned him a demerit in Communist theology class. Came the toast: "I propose a toast"—to President and Mre. Nixon? No.-"to the health of President and Mrs. Nixon." The difference between toasting someone and toasting someone'e health, is, well, noticeabla. And, finally, Chou toasted to the friendship between Cluiand American peopic." Which means nothing new at all, inasmuch as friendship emong eli peoples is postulated by Markist

The implications of all these symbols may not be immediately appearedt. But, watching the face of Chou, one could not help but reflect that the smile must have been similar on the face of his hero, Stalin, when the boys got together to tosst peace, and dignity, and self-determination of all peoples, at Yalia,

The Common Market Commisgion has taken a tough negotiat-ing stance during talks with these MFTA countries. So far it has promised the six countries only a partial free trade agreement

Demographic. Curbs Urged By Mansholt

By David Haworth BRUSSELS, Feb. 23 (IHT). -Sicoo Mansholt, regarded as the most influential Common Market to the Executive Commission's president, Franco Maria Malfatti, outlining some highly individual views about future economic policy, including suggestions that growth and consumption should be restricted, and social benefits for large families should be

The ideas, presented in what Mr. Mansholt calls "a central Eutopean plan," have caused some astonishment in European Economic Community circles. Copies of the letter have been given to the eight other commissioners, and are intended to provoke discuston about the problems which will face an enlarged community of 10 countries. His emphasis on demographic problems in Europe and his insistence that "the industrial West can no longer escape the need to control births" are bound to be controversial. But Mr. Mansholt says the commission should prepare its own 'testa-ment' which will alert public opinion in the Six and also in the four applicant countries. He attacks the emphasis Common Market governments put on increasing their gross national products and says there should be greater emphasis on intellectual and cultural well-being. He also suggested that there should be a ter on manufacturers according to how much their products pollute the environment.

In his enthusiases to find a European "ideal." Mr. Mansholt makes some slighting references to the United Nations and the United States. Surope, he says, must take the lead because the UN seems to be powerless and in permanent state of chaos.

On the United States, he said it backs the political force to guide the world "towards a solution of the great social and economic problems facing us." The United States, he says bluntly, is in

Ironically, Mr. Mansholt admits in his letter that he has drawn heavily on the contents of an as yet unpublished report by a team at the Massachu Technology, which takes the view that the world's future depends less on politics than on population trends, food production, pollution and the use of natural

He suggests that the economy of the EEC should be planned by a central authority, which would be an additional EEC institution. One of its jobs would be to guarantee a minimum living standard in each member state. It is not clear what M. Mansholt expects to schieve by the letter. Apparently, it has been timed to surface just before the meetings early next week between the Common Market's agricultural ministers and also discussions between foreign ministers of the Six and the four applicant countries, at which the agenda for the autumn summit meeting will be outlined. Mr.

. PARIS, Feb. 23 (IHT).-Aus- on industrial products, with many exceptions, and nothing at all on agriculture.

Commission spokesmen have pointed out that it would be unreasonable for the community to grant extensive concessions to non-member countries when the new member countries had to make important concessions in gaining membership. The com-mission has felt that both Norway and Denmark would have greater difficulty obtaining rati-fication of their membership treaties, if similar benefits were granted to non-joining countries. None of the six EFTA countries has so far said it was satisfied with the community's offers. They have pointed out that because of the many exceptions to free ex-change of industrial products, they will be faced with greater restrictions than they had under EFTA rules, and that the EEC would then be guilty of erecting new trade barriers, contrary to its stated policy.

Mr. Kreisky said today that under the present EEC offer, Austria would find barriers put up for such exports as special steel, paper and pulp and non-ferrous metals. He also said the com-munity would leave Austria with an agricultural problem and that there were certain "technical problems" relating to Austrian exports of goods originating in third countries.

This question of goods from third countries has raised difficult problems for other neutrals, including Finland, which imports considerably from the Soviet Union. The EEC is afraid that products could find a tariff-tree door into the community from third countries if rules aren't laid down carefully.

East German Problem This has already been a problem with goods entering tariff-free into West Germany from East Germany and then being re-exported, in effect giving Bast Germany a free trade relationship with the EEC. This East German loophole is expected to be plugged when Bast Germany enters the United Nations. ...

Others of the six former EFTA. countries are also engaged in dif-ficult negotiations in Brussels over special exceptions, Finland, half of whose exports consist of paper and woodpulp, is afraid of losing its markets if paper is not included in the free-trade prod-

Mr. Kreisky said today that France "understood perfectly our position of neutrality," but he added that "neutrality naturally forms a problem." He indicated. that Austria would be willing to go further than establishment of a free trade sone in order to harmonize its policy with the commumity, precisely what the Soviet Union has opposed.

Pressed on this, he said that the barmonization of tax structures was another example of coopera-tion. He said ha could give other examples, but did not name them. The United States had asked that the community's developing relations with the six KFTA countries be included in the U.S.-EEC trade talks in Brussels last month, but was turned down. U.S. trade negotiator William Eberle pointed out that U.S. political and economic interests would be affected by new trade. agreements, but the KEC decided that its business with EFTA was not Washington's affair. Mr. Kreisky met with Prime Minister Jacques Chaban-Delmas and Foreign Minister Maurice Schumann and paid a call at the OECD. Tomorrow, he will visit

Mr. Valpreda is charged with planting a bomb in a Milan bank on Dec. 12, 1969, killing 16 persons and injuring 87 others. He also is accused of masterminding three Rome fromb explosions in which another 18 persons were injured also on Dec. 12, 1969, As Judge Orlando Falco read Mr. Valpreda's name, applause swept the courtroom and youths in the audience stood up, giving the clenched-fist salinte of anarchism. U.S. Agency Plans to Order Cut In Lead Content of Gasoline

By Elsie Carper

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (WP). -The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) announced yesterday that it is ordering a reduction of the lead content in gasoline to protect the public health. William D. Ruckelshaus, EPA administrator, said the agency is proposing regulations that will: require large-volume gasoline stations to carry a near-lead-free gasoline by mid 1974. The regulations also will require a gradual reduction of lead in all regular and premium high-octans gasoline starting Jan. 1, 1974. Mr. Ruckelshaus said the regulations will be issued for two • The amount of lead reaching the air from automobile emissions in many cities exceeds what is considered a safe level for public health. • Nearly lead-free gasonine is essential for the proper functioning of catalytic converters, the devices that major suto manufacturers plan to put on 1975model cars to most exhaust emission requirements of the Clean Air Act.

The proposed regulations were published in the Federal Register today. There will be a 90-day period in which the public and industry may comment and during that time public hearings will be held. Mr. Ruckelshaus said he expects that the hearings will be conducted in Washington, Los Angeles and Dallas. After that, final regulations will be issued. Mr. Ruckelshaus said the regulations will reduce lead emissions by 60 to 65 percent by mid 1977 and cut sirborne lead levels to

2 micrograms per cubic meter, "a level, based on present scientific evidence, which is fully protective of public health.".

A report issued by EPA on the health hazards of airborne lead said that in a mass screening of inner city children 25 percent were found to have blood lead levels exceeding what is considered a safe amount. The children tested did not have clinical lead poisoning that comes from eating lead paint, but had been expose to air with high concentrations of lead from automobiles.

Increase in Price

RPA estimated that the nonleaded 91 octane gasolina will cost about 1.6 cents more a gallon than the present regular leaded gasoline. Cars equipped with the catalysts will consume about 3 percent more gasoline.

The higher price and the increased consumption, along with the cost of the anti-pollution devices, will mean that it will cost about I cent more a mile for the life of the car, EPA said.

The proposed regulations would require that the lead content of 94 octane regular gasoline and 100 octane premium be reduced to 2 grams per gallon after Jan. 1, 1974; to 1.7 grams after Jan. 1, 1975; 1.5 grams after Jan. 1, 1976, and 1.25 grams after Jan 1, 1977. Regular gasoline now contains 22 grams and premium contains 2,7 grams.

Mr. Ruckelshaus said that leaded gasoline will still be available for older cars that do not have catalytic converters and need high octane gasoline. Lead in gasoline was not banned out-ight, he said, because this would result in the use of aromatics to boost octane. Aromatics have been linked to cancer.

Einstein—An American in Picardy

DARIS (IHT).—Hanging in my bedroom because my wife understandably rejected it for the more public walls of the living room is a painting of a blowsy nude. Rubens-like in her proportions, but without the fair pink and white lusclousness which makes Rubens's models attractive to those who like their women

Indeed she is not attractive at all, neither pretty nor sexy, but after all you don't need a beautiful subject to produce a beautiful painting.

What I like about this one is the strong drawing of the figure, especially around the haunches, and the way in which its reds and greens are so skillfully belanced that you think you are seeing flesh tones, actually completely absent from the picture.

This work is by the American artist William Einstein and belongs to what may be haptized his Amsterdam period-a trifle short-lived. Einstein was fascinated by the Amsterdam red-light district when he first discovered it, and set to painting its girls with such diligence that he was waited upon by a delegation of their managers who pointed out that their charges were wasting valuable time and added that anyone who interfered with the normal practice of their profession could not be rated high on the scale of life expectancy.

This terminated the Amsterdam period, but Einstein already had considerable number canvases to show for it, including one he named for another celebrated Amsterdam painting, "The Night Watch" (or, preferably, since its title in French brings out the idea better, "La Ronde de Nuit"). Unlike his illustrious predecessor's painting, Einstein'e "Night Watch" does not depict a militia company, but a procession of Amsterdam harlots along one of the canals, with a selection of picture window girls in the background.

The reference to Rembrandt in this picture's title perhaps plunges deeper than a simple, sercastic comparison. Of the great painters of the past, Rem-brandt is the one who has marked Einstein, coincided with the hey-"I can feel the 'why' of Rembrandt," he says. "I admire Goya perhaps as much, but I can't feel myself into his Spanish skin, as I can into the Dutch, or possibly Jewish, skin of Rembrandt, Rembrandt conceived form as a function of the quality of light. don't know to what extent that influenced me, but I have always been a painter of light. I feel comradeship with Rembrandt...

Of course getting his qualities onto canvas is another story." Einstein is one of the rare American artists who was in France in the 1920-1930 days of glory and still is. So far as I know there are only three others -Man Ray, who must have been about a decade ahead of the main body; Abraham Rattner, who was probably a decade behind it (unless I am in error because it was only just before the war that I met him myself), and Alexander Calder, who, like Einstein, coincided with the heyday of Montparnasse.

Contacts

It was, indeed, with Calder that Einstein enjoyed probably his closest relationship with an-other American artist during the Great Beanfeast. At one time they lived in the same hullding, the Einsteins on the ground floor, Calder on the second. They rigged up a Rube-Goldberg-like contraption of pulleys on the outside of the building, permitting the Einsteins to dispatch breakfast to Calder, in those days a bachelor. Those were the days of Calder's Circus, when Calder, seated on the floor, would manipulate an imaginative succession of miniature trapezists. trained animals, chariot racers.

knife throwers and the like. I have forgotten when and where I first met Einstein, but sidnously, for Einstein was in charge of the phonograph. Except for Calder, Einstein's most pregnant contacts were not particularly with the horde of Americans then milling about the Dome, the Rotonde and the Select (the Coupole, built around the end of 1927 or early in 1928. did not then exist). His chief attachments were with the international art and literary coterie, which interpenetrated the American Montparnassian microcosmos, but was not quite congruent with it.

The names one encounters in Einstein's as yet unpublished memoirs are those of Europeans Leger, Ozenfant, Marcel Duchamp (who, when Einstein first met him, was deeply involved in practicing with his yo-yo), Kandinsky, Arp, Metzinger, Tohanyl, Soutine, and, in the literary department, Aragon. Some of these exercised a temporary influence on Einstein, and one of them a permanent one. He was much impressed by Mondrian, and painted a few canvases in his linear, pure-color style, but it did not open much scope for an artist destined to become a painter of light. In the early 1930s he indulged in a brief flirtation with abstraction and was also lightly brushed by the wing of surrealism.

All this is 40 years past, and Einstein has now settled down to representational painting, with, if a layman may presume to suggest it, a dash of impressionism and a touch of fauvism, If you ask Einstein whose influence he feels most strongly he will tell you Soutine, and once you have been thus informed you can sense it in his work; but Soutine has been absorbed into a manner which is purely Einstein.

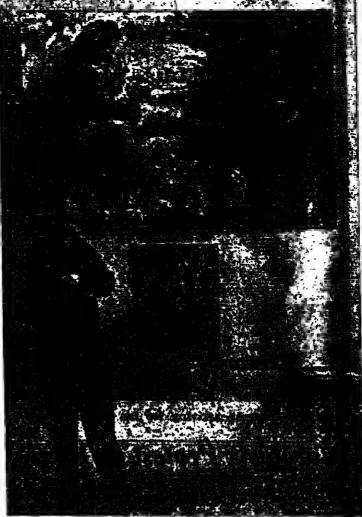

Or, rather (ignoring the prewar period of experimentation), Einstein L Two new Einsteins have appeared in the where I first met Einstein, but last seven years, each diverging it may well have been at Calder's from the Einstein of the easel Circus, which I frequented asin a major enterprise unique for an American artist in France, and, indeed, highly unusual for any foreign artist in France. The only comparable example seems to be the selection of Chagall to paint the celling of the Paris Opéra,

Einstein is designing the choir windows of Abbeville's church of St. Vulfran, which in the ecclesiastical hierarchy is only a collegial church, but has the dimensions and the majesty of a cathedral It was gutted during the war; only its massive shell remains, now undergoing restoration. The choir, walled off from the empty nave, has been regained for worship. Its plain glass windows are being replaced with stained glass by Einstein. This the work of Einstein III; that of Einstein II is also visible at Abbeville, for the commission which revealed Einstein II led to that which created Einstein III

It all started in 1965, when Einstein showed at St. Jean de Montmartre some models for stained glass windows. It happened that one of the visitors to this show was the Abbé Malin, archiprétre of Abbeville, who was impressed by it; and it happen-ed also that some time later a mutual acquaintance introduced the abbé to Etnatein. Abbé Malin was at that time involved in the building of a new modernistic church at Abbeville. He invited Einstein to submit designs for the Stations of the Cross and the alter paintings. You can see them in place today, rendered more brilliant by skylights built into the roof expressly to il-luminate them. The style is luminate them. The style is slashingly dramatic, and though it does recall Einstein's other painting, it represents at least an evolution, if not a departure,

The success of this work led to the commission to do the windows for St. Vulfran, "Commission" is perhaps a little too definite. Design and execution are not the only problems. Einstein had been assigned to create the windows, but nobody had been assigned to pay for them. In the Middle Ages, the carpenters' guild chipped in for one window, the candle-makers' guild for another, and so on. Medieval guilds are in short supply in Abbeville today, but in the end, the modern method turned out to be very much the same. The city sponsored one window, the congregation another, the national administration of historic monuments another, and so on. Six of the windows are now in place. Three more are on order. It is his hope eventually to fill all the window frames of the choir—there are 26 or 27 of them, I believe.

The windows are Einstein III and bear no easily discernible family likeness to anything else he has ever done. They manage somehow to be indisputably modern and yet in the spirit of the 13th century, in harmony with their setting. In this achievement Einstein had potent help from the executor of his designs, Charles Marq of Reims, whose family has been making stained giass since the Middle Ages. The windows are not representative art: you could hardly call them abstractionist in any ordinary sense either. This time Einstein is not painting light, he is painting with light. And with that light he has attempted to express the essence of the subject each window represents, for each has a subject, though you will find nowhere a picture of it.

A project of this sort is an artist's dream: To convert it into reality, Einstein gave up - his Paris studio a few years ago and moved to Acheux-en-Vimen, a vilnear to what can safely be described as the crowning achievement of his career. An American has become the leading

Layton's 'O.W.'-Dramatic View of Oscar Wilde's Life

By Oleg Kerensky

LONDON, Feb. 23 (IHT).—It was natural that the Royal Ballet's touring group should want to follow Joe Layton's very successful and popular Noel Coward ballet, "The Grand Tour," with shother work by the same choreographer and equally natural that Mr. Layton, who is best known for his work on Broadway and in Hollywood, should want to do something more serious.

"O.W." which had its first performance last night, is perhaps over ambitious in trying to tell Oscar Wilde's life story in ballet form and the opening scene suggests that the treatment is going to be sensational and vulgar. There should really be a program note to explain that the ballet within the ballet is a deliberate parody of Wilde's first meeting with Lord Alfred Douglas (and a deliberate parody of classical ballet at the same time). It's an entertainment allegedly put on by Lord Alfred's father, the Marquess of Queensberry, but actually incorporating a degree of homosexual permissive-ness which has only recently reached the public theater. As I watched Paul Clarke's Wilde, in caricature mask, repulse the female butterflies and paw at Nicholas Johnson as the cager male one. I understood why a notice in Sadier's Wells Theatre fover warned that the ballet is not suitable for children,

The rest of "O.W." is more serious, and more old-fashioned. Indeed it is not so far from the dramatic ballets which Robert Helpmann made for the Royal Ballet 25 years ago or which some of the smaller French companies used to take on tour. In other words, it depends more on acting and stage effects than on dancing.

The link between the opening scene and the others is Vyvyan Lorrayne, as the sphinz, the lady who befriended Wilde. She is outraged by the Queensberry entertainment, and rises to protest. The set of the minature theater disappears to reveal an older Wilde, in prison clothes, with ropes representing prison bars hanging in front of him. The recorded voice of Sir John Gielgud intones an extract from "De Profundis." The set changes to a floral backcloth. Wilde emerges in green velvet, and Nicholas Johnson reappears as the real Lord Alfred (Bosie). Wilde is seen dancing with him. flirting with a group of rough young men, and engaging in a stylized boxing match with Queensberry. Finally he is reconciled with his caricatured self, stops the prison ropes half-way as they descend again and philosophically tosses his green carnation into the orchestra pit before allowing the ropes to make their final descent.

It is effective theater, and some people found Michael Somes extremely moving as the older Wilde, though his performance, necessarily mannered, struck me as rather self-conscious, and he is not given the chance to show us anything of Wilde's gentus. Of course it is marvelous to see Somes, who was for many years Fonteyn's regular partner, back in a major new role. He won a prolonged ovation from the audience and the rest of the cast. The women— Vyvyan Lorrayne and Margaret Barbieri as Wilde's wife—had little to do. The main honors were divided among Nicholas Johnson, superb as the outrageously provocative butterfly and as the handsome Bosie; Paul Clarke, deliciously crude as Queensberry's idea of Wilde; and Stephen Jefferies, deferential but unmously threatening as the leader of the young men. William Walton's Viola Concerto and an extract from his ballet "The Quest" suited the action well enough; John Conklin's decors and costumes were as evocative as his very different ones for "The Grand Tour." But I doubt if this new work will equal the Coward in popularity, though it may prove good box-office while its sensation value lasts.

To prove that he is not in danger of being type cast after playing Gertrude Stein and Bosie, Nicholas Jolinson rounded off the evening by giving an outstandingly virile and technically polished interpretation of Captain Belaye in Cranko's "Pineapple Poll." He seems bound to become one of the Royal Ballet's brightest stars.

A Change of Scene for Alexandre's Salon . The pilot issue features a pro--but the art show and the mod-By Hebe Dorsey ern furniture have so changed

PARIS, Feb. 23 (IHT),-While Alexandre was cutting her hair recently, Annick Le Moine tried to convince him that his salon on Fanbourg Saint-Honoré needed lift. When he was through, she had hardly any hair left but a contract in her pocket.

Alexandre agreed that his alients were bored with the old décor-the fake ocelot settee, hair rinse ads and photos of assorted along with Miss Le Moine's idea of turning the salon into so art. gallery-for free.

"I didn't want a cut on the sales," he said. "All I wanted was a fresh new look. I felt we had gone as far as one could go in beauty salon style. I wanted to give my customers a breath of air."

In exchange for space, Miss Le Moine contracted to stage a new show every month. The first one, in January, was an immediate success-over 30 percent of the works on display were sold.

The new selection includes decorative and inexpensive silk-screen prints. "After all, one has to follow the mood of the place," Miss Le Moine said. "This is not Parke-Bernet." She tries to give space to original work by young unknowns, such as Marc Bankowsky, whose rustic tapestries and mosales were on view in January, as were patchwork tapestries by Emmanuel Chauche Other exhibitors last month were Philippe Demonts with his pop plastic boxes and Guy Melavia, whose stained glass windows have been cleverly put to use in a shampoo room which gives onto a dull, dim courtyard. Among this month's artists is Cesar Golone, a young surrealist, who has had a num-ber of exhibitions, including one at the Musée d'Art Moderne in Paris in 1969.

While he was at it, Alexandre chucked out all the portraits of .

The staff is not only happy. According to Miss Le Moine, they are also buying the art.

East Germany To Complete State Control

Moves to Take Over Small Private Firms

BERLIN, Feb. 23 (NYT) —Erich Honecker, East Germany's party chief, has moved to wipe out all remnants of capitalism and make the country's few remaining private concerns surrender their enterprise to the state,

The Communist party drive is designed to complete socialization in East Germany, State-owned industries already make up more than 85 percent of total production, including all vital fields; farming was collectivized in a drive 12 years ago.

However, such craftsmen as plumbers or carpenters and some small consumer-goods concerns were permitted until now to operate privately or, under a "half-state" clause, to work with 50 percent private capital and percent state ownership.

Mr. Honecker made his move public in a message last week to the small Liberal Democratic party's 11th convention at Welmar. The party consists largely of middle-class craftsmen and owners of small companies or

Mr. Honecker urged the party members to "step up further incorporation into the socialist society." Manfred Gerlach, Liberal party chairman, and several speakers at the convention made it clear that they interpreted the message as a command and that there was nothing to do but comply. Compensation to be Offered

Gottfried Engelmann, part owner of a textile factory in Glauchau, Saxony, told the detegates that he was ready "to sell out to the state," indicating that the East German regime was willing to offer compensation. . Werner Zeuke of Berlin, part owner of the Zeuke & Vegwerth Corp., East Germany's largest producers of model railway trains, said he saw his future as an employee of a "socialist plant," Mr. Gerlach warned craftsmen that they must give up "all egotism and the search for profits." Instead, he said, they should join together into "collectives" and thus "make use of the advantages of socialist production."

The Communist party paper News Deutschland and other East German news media did not report any dissent or protest at the convention over the nation-

According to the latest East German statistics, private enterprises stilt make up 5.7 percent of the gross national product, while factories with 50 percent state ownership represent 8.7 percent. Private craftsmen and companies have been stringently taxed since 1956 yet many tradesmen have been able to make out well.

There was no explanation why the regime decided to crack down on private enterprises, tolerated until now because of the shortage in consumer goods and the dearth of repair and spare-parts facili-

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

AEG-Telefunken to Cut Dividend

AEG-Telefunken announces it will cut its dividend for 1971 to 5 DM a share from the 8 DM paid in 1970. The electronics company says that despite higher 1971 group sales of 10 billion marks, a rise of 8.7 percent over 1970, sharply rising costs, an unsatisfactory market situation and in some cases sharp price declines led to shrinking profits in the office machinery sector and substantial losses in some other divisions. Good results in the group's other sectors could not compensate for these adverse trends, nor could streamlining and selected price increases, the company adds. For the current year, AEG-Telefunken says it expects a 6 percent growth in Japan claimed 48.2 percent of shipbuilding—11,982,495 tons—well ahead of second-placed Sweden, with 7.4 percent, West Germany, 5.6 percent and Britain, 5 percent.

Japan, Russia in Siberian Project The Soviet Union and Japan have exchanged lettere on developing pulp resources in Siberia, their third joint project for development of resources in that region, the Japanese Foreign Ministry reports. The letters call for prompt guidecement of the basic contract concluded in December between Japan Chip Trading Co. and the Soviet Foreign Trade Corp. on development of industrial chips and broad-leaf pulp resources. Under the contract, the Soviet Union will supply industrial chips and broad-leaf pulp to Japan-in exchange for machines, equipment and material. Nippon Mining Has Ore Discovery

Nippon Mining says it has discovered two nonferrous ore bodies on a concession it holds in the Asmara area of Ethiopia's Eritres Province. The company says it has carried out trial borings at two locations where veins of copper and copperlead-zinc showed surface outeroppings. Nippon Mining declines to estimate total ore reserves at either tocation, saying that exptoration work is expected to continue throughout 1972.

Train Reaches Record 170 MPH

A newly-built electric train clocked a record 170 miles an hour in a test run on the Sanyo line, the state-run Japan National Railways reports. Officials say the railway's previous record of 160 mph was set in a test run on the Tokaldo line March 30, 1963. Authorities say they plan to run trains on the Sanyo line at a maximum speed of 156 mph and of 131 mph on the Tokaido line.

The light, small, relatively inexpensive rotary engine will be introduced into at least some U.S.-made cars on a major scale -bot not this year or the next or the next. Yugoslavia Set to Continue Price Freeze Indefinitely

BELGRADE, Feb. 23 (AP-DJ). -The Yugoslav government said today that the price freeze, introduced in November to surb inflation wilt continue indefinitely past the previously set expiration date of March 1.

The spokesman added that some adjustments of prices will take place, within the 5 percent in-crease provided for by the 1972

He said the adjustment of price increases would be "selective," but he would not specify whether the 5 percent increase limit means an average for the economy as a whole, or for individual groups of articles, or the limit of tha price increase for any individual article.

The 5 percent provision has been repeatedly questioned by members of parliament as "unrealistic," in view of the record 20 percent inflation in Yugoslavia last year, despite the original price freeze introduced in October, 1970.

of Wankel-powered cars for sale -probabty a high-performance, relatively expensive variation of the Vega. But the volume probably will not exceed 30,000. If that model is well-received, GM could start phasing in Wankels into other cars starting in 1975. GM president Edward Cole, an engineer, who has personally shepherded the Wankel project, says there are no more hig break-throughs needed before GM can produce usable rotary engines now that it has solved the prob-lem of the life of rotor seals. He says GM now is trying to "optimize" the engine—work out the best possible design and production process to yield low cost, high reliability and good performance. "If I weren't optimistic, I wouldn't be spending the corporation's money," he says.

GM is not the only auto maker racing to get into Wankel production. Japan's biggest auto makers have licenses to develop Wankels, and Toyo Kogyo, a smaller firm, has been producing Wankel engine cars for several years. A group of European auto makers have some Wankel-engine prototype cars under develop-

Bank Doubts U.S. Aim for GNP Growth

Report Cites Weakness In Consumer Buying

NEW YORK, Feb. 23 (Reuters).—Lack of strength in consumer buying puts in doubt offi-cial estimates of a $100 hillion. gain in this year's gross national prodoct, according to Morgan Guaranty Trust Co.

In its monthly survey, the bank said that the generally "mixed character" of recent business news "has clearly enlarged the ranks of those who are skeptical" about a $100 billion rise. For these estimates to retain a "sense of reasonableness" the first-quarter gain in GNP probably would have to be in excess of $30 billion, the bank said-adding that such an outcome "is becoming increasingly unlikely." The key reason for this is that consumer buying "still isn't showing any real strength," the bank said. In fact, the bank added, by a "literal reading of retail trade statistics, there has been no recent tinnrovement at all." Morgan said the flatness in consumer buying "may be due in nert" to the rather confusing neture of recent income and tax developments whereby tax reduction resulted in smaller takehome pay. The bank also cited psychological" explanations for caution on the part of consumers. It said the consumer and the businessman alike are affected by a "general malaise," stemming from an unsettled national mood. The bank said that in this situation the administration may be tempted to intensity fiscal stimulus, but added that concern over how to finance the prospective deficits already expected may he "itself a major reason why people are troubled." It is not inconceivable that the buying mood could change very suddenly if there is a bunching of favorable news items," which underscores the advisability of "net opening the spigots of policy stimulus much further

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (WP). -Consumer prices rose a modest 0.1 percent in January, despite administration expectations that they would advance more rapidly in tha three months following the end of the wage-price freeze. The government said today that higher prices for meats, new cars, and some services were largely offset by lower prices for fresh vegetables, clothing, used cars, and gasoline in January.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the consumer price index advanced to 123.2 percent of the 1967 average, 3.4 percent above a year ago. This means a representative cross-section of goods and services that cost $10 in 1967 now requires $12,32. Put another way, the dollar is now worth about 81 cents. in terms of 1967 purchasing Adjusted for seasonal differences, consumer prices rose 0.3 percent compared to an OA percent rise in December. . .

The prices of all items subject to controls in Phase 2 increased by 0.1 percent, compared to an 0.2 percent increase in December.

Profit-Taking Erodes Early N.Y. Price Gain By Terry Robards

NEW YORK, Feb. 23 (NYT) .--The stock market moved sideways again today in fairly active trading. An effort at a morning rally that fizzied in the afternoon virtually mirrored yesterday's performance on the New York Stock Exchange.

. The Dow Jones industrial average, ahead 2.63 at 11:30 a.m., settled back from then on and closed with a toss of 1.58 at 911.88. Volume totaled 18.77 million shares, slightly above yesterday'a 16.67 million. Some analysts are saying that the relatively low volume that has accompanied recent trendless sessions indicates selling pressure is minimal. A host of issues reacted to news developments. Du Pont, the huge chemical company, confirmed that it is developing its own version of a semi-soft, nonabsor-bent contact lens and this was bad news for the other companies in the business.

Union Corp., a company that has not yet received approval to test its soft lens, dropped 1 3/8 to close at 14 5/8 in active trading. Dn Pont, meanwhile, attracted speculative interest and finished with a gain of 5/8 at 159 7/8 after trading as high as 161 1/8 earlier in the session. In another speculative situa-tion Natomas announced an offshore oil discovery near southeast Sumatra, and its stock shot up 5 1/8 to close at 18 7/8. · Curtiss-Wright retained its posi-tion atop the active list, and closed up 1/2 at 28 1/2 amid continuing speculation about the new Wankel rotary combustion engine, for which it has the North American manufacturing license. Texas Gulf Sulphur added another 3/8 to yesterday's burst and closed at 20 1/4 as second-most-

While the latter company's rights to the Wankel engine may put it indirectly in a position to profit from a low-pollution combustion engine, Lockheed has indicated it could produce a battery for a nonpolluting electric car. First National Stores gained

1 1/4 to 35 3/4. Kety Industries, which was up 1/8 at 13 1/2, has submitted a proposed tender offer o First National shareholders.

Amer Up Slightly Prices were mixed in moderately active trading on the American Stock Exchange.

The Amex index rose 0.02 at 27.62. Volume aggregated 5.57 million shares, versus 5.53 million yesterday.

Lockheed Absenteeism Draws U.S. Criticism

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 (Reuters).-Congressional investigators recommended today that the Air Force consider whether it can take financial action against Lockheed Aircraft Corp. over absenteeism by employees work-ing on the giant C5A cargo plane.

The new move was proposed by the General Accounting Offica (GAO), which said in a random study it found e.s percent of the production assembly employees were idle and another 6.2 percent were absent from their work sta-

Du Pont Preparing Advanced New Soft Lens

NEW YORK, Peb. 23 (AP-DJ).—Du Pont is jumping into one of the hottest fields that Wall Street has eeen in years—soft

The giant chemical company has developed a lens that doctors and optometrists who have seen it say could make present soft contacts obsolete.

Ironically, the Du Pont development, market, comes at a time when soft-lens companies, bidding for a place in the lucrative market, are coming under in-Food and Drug Administration (FDA). The agency, observers say, is alarmed at reports of bacterial contamination of the lenses that have been publicized in recent months. This means that FDA marketing approval of new soft contacts, and the expected hig earnings, may be a lot farther off than Wall Street imagines, perhaps several years. With Du Pont's lens on the horizon, some analysts say, profits for some lens manufacturers may never materialize. Bausch & Lomb, the only company to win FDA marketing approval for its soft lenses, soon will be asked to supply new data on the safety of its lenses, eye-care professionals say.

There is speculation that the FDA will go even further and impose some type of control on the sale of the Bansch & Lomb lens so the agency could exert greater: supervision of the product. Such an action could severely limit sales of the lenses. In Rochester, Bausch & Lomb officials said they are aware of "nothing to indicate" that the FDA will seek to further control the sale of its soft lens, Renters reported. Approval Expected

Griffin Laboratories, a subsidiary of Frigitanics Doc., should get FDA marketing approval for its soft lens before the summer, industry sources believe. But it is expected that this approval will place sharp limits on its sales, permitting use only as a bandage for diseased eyes. mally, approval on this basis would not prevent doctors from also prescribing the lens for correction of eyesight, the highly lucrative market currently monopolized by Bausch & Lomb. . Union Corp., another contender for soft-lens profits, is expected to get FDA approval soon to test its lenses on humans. But one well-informed source says the FDA's requirements for exhaustive testing and the amount of red tape involved could mean that it will take Union about three

Do Pont, meanwhile, is avoiding any possibility of adverse publicity by simply declining to talk about its new tens. Paul White, of the Massachusetts College of Optometry, who is helping Du Pont with the lens testing, stresses that it could be several years before the lens gets onto the market. He will not comment on reports that it is made of Teflon.

Nor will he discuss reports that the tens can be permeated by oxygen. Like all living tissue, eye tissue needs oxygen. Researchers have been critical of many of the soft tenses that are being developed because, it is thought, oxygen cannot pass through them.

EDMUND WILSON By Leonard Kriegel. 145 pm. Southern Illinois University Press, 85.95.

THE FICTION OF KATHERINE MANSFIELD By Marcin Magalaner, 148 pps. Southern Illinois University Press. $5.95.

Reviewed by Thomas Lask

BOTH of these books are part of Southern Illinois's ongoing Crosscurrents series, a set of monographs devoted to 20thcentury writers, of which Harry I. Moore is the general editor. A good idea of their range can be gathered from the two titles heading this column: one a study of the still active, though somewhat curmudgeon-like career of the writer many will accept as our most illustrious man of letters; the other of a New Zealander who probably figures higher in the consciousness of academic critics than she does in the mind of the general reader. A glance at Marvin Magalaner's bibliography shows that interest in Miss Mansfield has decreased considerably in the last two or three decades, although her work figures as an interesting strand in 20th-century composition. It is a characteristic of these monographs to consider the full career though not necessarily everything in it. In the case of Leonard Kriegel's "Edmund Wilson," it is a formula that works splendidly. For he has made a revealing drams of the turns (and sometimes the twists) of Wilson's literary life. Kriegel has in fact given us an intel-lectual history of the man, put-ting much in little space. For this he has slighted the poetry, the plays and the fiction though they are mentioned as need be, and he has subordinated the life to the work. But the career of the critic thereby stands out in sharpest outline.

In a highly relevant way, Wilson's life is the pattern of the He began writing actively in the twenties and in "I Re-member Daisy" paid tribute to that decade. The Depression, which he recorded in "The American Jitters," not only turned him against the poverty and misery he saw increasing around him, but also made him suspect that there was something in American society that bred such conditions. Kriegel suggests more than once, however, that Wilson's condemnation of American society derived as much from a patrician fastidiousness as from an objective. view of American social and economic life.

Wilson's infatuation with Marxism was warm but brief, especially Marxism in its Stalinist form. And he poured out his dislilusionment in To the Finland Station," which the author considers his best book. Since World War II, Wilson has turned away from his society, becoming more and more distant from it and savagely and sometimes pettily conservative. His is almost a classic progress of the would appear that the interest in Wilson today, especially to the younger men, is focused more on how he will fill out the record than on anything he might contribute in the course of it. Such a resumé does an injustice to the richness of the author's exposition and to the vigor of the writing-a notable feature of the book. He is continually engaged by his subject and is both provocative and insightful in pointing out Wilson's strengths and weaknesses. Timo and again, he underlines for us, in sharp epigrammatic plurase, those qualities of Wilson as a journalist, critic or social historian that have given him his current eminence.

What is especially interesting is that Kriegel makes of Wilson the same moral demands that Wilson has made of his country and his coontrymen. And he judges him severely, Kriegel says of Wilson's failing off after World War II appears as a personal disappointment to him. That Wilson refuses to participate in contemporary life. Kriegel can almost forgive, but that he has closed his eyes to it and refuses to see what is hap-pening is more then the author is willing to forgive. This double play of judgment, of setting the judge in the dock, makes for an uncommonly vigorous study, far removed from the usual scholarly exercise.

Marvin Magalaner has set him-self other goals, the explication of Katherine Mansfield's work to prove that there are greater riches in it than meet a cosual reading. Without making claims for her as a major writer, he wants to show that there is more density, greater psychological perception and technical skill than she is given credit for. He makes a number of parallels to the epiphanics of James Joyce those small revela-tions of character that also reveal a life, a device, he says, Miss Mansfield also used though not to equal effect.

He shows how Miss Mansfield returns in her maturity to the childhood in New Zealand, Her fear of abandonment because of her seemingly unending separa-tion from John Middleton Murry, and the strange reversal of male and female roles in their relationship are reflected in the short stories. He is also re-sourceful in uncovering the layer over layer of meaning under the surface finish of these tales. He is so successful in this that he sometimes chides ber for not doing what she should have done to maintain the symbolic equation that he has discovered. His method does a great deal for the stories, but not always as much for the reader. For except for the final summing up he neglects to say why the stories should be read at all. The greatest tales in our literature have made an immediate appeal. have had an immediate effect. It is only when we ask what means were used to achieve them, that the critical tools Magalaner uses come into play. He has reversed the order, hopside of the fabric he can make more attractive the pattern that lies on top. It doesn't always work, but that it works as well as it does is a tribute to his critical resourcefulness and, as he would be the first to argue, to the artistry of his subject.

Pirates' Clemente Is Tired Of Being the Series Hero

By Joseph Durso

the hero of the World Series, the spoils of victory hang heavy as he prepares for his 18th season with the Pittsburgh Piratesmore tired and more troubled than at any time in recent years.

"I had a rough winter," the 37year-old Puerto Rican outfielder said yesterday as he drooped in front of his locker in the Pirate City clubhouse. "I didn't do any dse. I kept going from one place to another, and never had enough time home. My father was very ill, I lost 10 pounds and now I have stomach trouble.

"They took X-rays of my stomach when I got here the other day and found nothing but spasms. Tension, the doctor says. But I'm worn out. I am more tired today than I was when the World Series ended."

The day the World Series ended, last Oct. 17, nobody in baseball stood taller than Robert Walker Clemente. He had just led the Pirates to their upset victory over the Baltimore Orioles with a 414 average and other soap-opera feats, and that was after a season in which he had

"After the Series I was pretty tired," he said yesterday after a two-hour workout at the Pirates' training complex. "After all, we had played 200 games since February. So I said, I'll go home and rest.

through our room. People from the town, even tourists. "Then I had so many things going down there, and I just couldn't say no. Every day I was doing something different. The governor sent for me, the park administration, civic clubs. We tried to get away to South America for a vacation, and were called back because my father took sick. I may even have to go home again next month."

When Clemente checked into spring training, his weight was down to 176, his lightest in years. Manager Bill Virdon, who inherited the world champions when Danny Murtaugh retired this winter, concedes that his superstar "has had a little stomach

Neither are the rest of the Pirates, who have heard Clemente complain of ill health for years while compiling a robust career average of 318. They talk more of the knee operations undergone by Willie Stargell and Gene Alley and about the muddle at abortstop or in the bullpen. But Roberto insists that, even at $140,000 a season, he is paying a high price for success.

Maryland Wakes Up To Victory

Beats Richmond After Slow Start

NEW YORK, Feb. 23 (AP).— "We can't get up for the little ones," said Maryland coach Charles (Lefty) Driesell. Fortunately, Lefty's 12th-ranked Terrapius found some inspira-tion after the half-time intermission last night, outscored Richmond 10-2 in the opening four minutes of the second half and rolled to a 76-61 victory over Richmond led 38-33 at the half before the host Terps, en route to their 19th victory in 22 games, went on their tear, sparked by sophomore Tom McMillen, who scored 18 of his game-high 25 points in the second half. "I knew Richmond would do what it did-bringing its big men out to slow down the game-but luckily we overcome it," said

"I was hoping for an easy game on the bench tonight, but that eems to be the kind of team we are," he said. The coach praised junior guard Bob Bodell, a re-serve who came in and scored 11 points. Roger Hatcher scored to lead the Spiders, who have a 6-16 won-lost record.

In last night's other major action, Wisconsin rallied to whip Purdue, 66-60, and Indiana routed Minois, 90-71, in Big Ten play; Southern Methodist best Teras Tech, 67-73, and Texas A-M out-lasted Baylor, 101-85, in over-time in Southwest Conference play. In a slowdown affair, Virginia Military edged William-Mary, 37-35, in overtime. "Al Sparks? Al Sparks knocked me out? Not Al Sparks." Gray is survived by his widow. Wisconsin blew a five-point half-time lead before Leon Howard, the Badgers' leading scorer with 16 points, sank two field goals and a pair of free throws in the closing minutes to cool off the Bollermakers. Indiana, with Jobie Wright

George Chuvalo, Canadian heavyweight champion and a close scoring 26 points and John Riter 23, posted its fifth straight Big friend of Gray's, called the death Ten triumph, putting away II-linois in the opening minutes by streaking to a 21-9 lead. American Hoopster Scores Points in France

By John Vinceur

VILLEURBANNE, France (AP).-There's ol' Purk and Mardy and Alain Gilles and a buddy down from Paris for the day, just sitting at the bar and knocking down the Alsetian draft beer, just sitting and grabbing at the peanuts with their big jump-shooting hands. With the exception of Gilles, as hawk-faced as a Sioux and captain of the French national team, they are all Americans, basketball driftwood that has washed up in France, stars to Gallic eyes, but men who admit there is no guarantee they would be winners in the Wednesday three-man league back at P.S. The bar is called Le Dribble and features the treacherous dribble cocktail, which Gilles says nobody ever orders. Not here in Villeurbanne anyway, a kind of French Jersey City that glowers low and grey across the river from Lyons. The friend down from Paris is talking: We're out in Nilvange, by the Belgian border. Ugilest town in the world, mud running in the street like a tide. Black, dis-gusting. We get dressed into our warmup suits and they run us out into the gym and the crowd is screaming bloody mur-der. Arabs, Italians, Turks, all these guys from the mills. But we don't stop running. We go right under the basket and out into a parking lot) It's freezing like crazy and the mud is up to our ankles and we're throwing the ball around. The manager says we're warming up outside because the crowd would throw rivets at us otherwise. Twenty-five minutes of that and when the game starts I'm frozen solid, blue, and slipping shoes. Of course we get beat.

The next day the local paper says, "L'Américain était plutôt decevant"-the American was rather disappointing. But who the hell did they expect? The

Of Purk shakes his head. He's seen equal or worse: the town in Belgium where they built the municipal outdoor court on a 20 percent grade so the water would drain off easier; the arena in Nantes where the floor is concrete and the temperature so cold you can see your breath; the gym in Challans where there is something like a carpet covering the court and the players can't hear themselves running or the ball ol' Purk shakes his head again and says in a very low voice that everybody catches just the same: "Beats working though." And there is silent of the approximately 60 Americans now playing in the two French basketball leagues. Dozens of others, including a handful of first-rate players, labor in Spain, Italy, Belgium and Austria, trying to score points, teach fundamentals to their teammates, and to stay away as long as possible from going back to the "real life" in the United States, of boring jobs and county REC league basketball. Of its European neighbors.

France offers the softest underbelly for the American penetra-tion. First, the quality of play is so mediocre—France finished near the bottom in a European tournament this fall—as to turn almost any non-arthritic Yank into a 20-point-per-game man. two foreigners on every team

Most of Purkhiser's French teammales have jobs with the companies of the club's directors, but of Purk is officially a student. He describes his French as improving and the truth is that of Purk has all day to work on the imperfect and subjunctive because Villeur-banne saks only that he come to practice and show up for

In theory, French basketball is amateur, but in fact a player like Purkhiser is paid. He will say nothing about it, and VII-leurbanne will deny it, but the going season rate for a well-thought-of American is between $8,000 and $12,000.

"I like it here fine," says Purkhiser, who is rod-straight and blond, the way the French think all Americans should look.
"I can tell you that I don't like hear Americans saying the French are unfriendly, that you've got to adjust."

Purkhiser came to Villeur-banne from a team in Antwerp, where he materialized after shooting baskets for the U.S. Army, Mardy, however, came sight unseen, merchandised by a recruiting agent, a kind of "French Connection" in reverse, who deals mainly in U.S. pivot men for European buyers.

But of all the Americans in French baskethall, the little men who cannot shoot straight, the middle-sized corner men who cannot rebound, the 6-6ers who drown in sweat and heave in pain after three fastbreaks. Mardy is the only one who has not found acceptance.

"We got a bearskin with no bear inside," says Ton Ton, ticket taker at Villeurbanne's home games and owner of Ton Ton's restaurant.

Mardy, who played a year at Princeton before quitting over disagreement with the coach, takes it hard. Even more then the other Americans, he was the type of kid who could close his eyes and hear an announcer doing the play-by-play of a Knick game in his head: "Reed holds the ball, now gives it to Bradley who screens for Mardy. Mardy fires. Good." Although he doesn't like any psychological probing of his own motives, he admits: "Playing basketball in France is a fantasy-trip that a lot of guys are indulging themselves in. If they were tougher and more honest with themselves they'd be doing other things, more grown up. "But in my case, I defend coming over here. I'd never have gotten to Europe. It's been kind of expanding actually. I just didn't fit into their ways. Practice is insune, just scrimmaging and shooting. Then there is one coach for practice -his first name is Jesus- and then another for the games.

Prof. Frederic G. Cassidy listening to a tape recording of regional usage in his laboratory at the University of Wisconsin in Madison.

Listening In on America

By Israel Shenker

MADISON, WIS. (NYT).-American English is the language of plainspeaking, much of it plainly inimitable.

But a great deal of this libretto of life goes in one ear and out the other, leaving barest traces of fleeting story. Varying from region to region, percussively different often within the clangor of a single loud voice, many expressions of American English die unrecollected and unmatched, but not unmourned.

There are now many scholars around the nation who ignore the common stock and common places and immortalize the differences. At the University of Wisconsin, Prof. Frederic G. Cassidy says "Vivent les différences!" and presides over a vast, comprehensive effort to give printed reality to the dream of a Dictionary of American Regional English (DARE)

"There's always a certain amount of regional expression disappearing," said Prof. Cassidy, "and there's also a certain amount of creation, and I'd guess they compensate for each other, Radio and TV are affecting local usage, not ruining it. Just because Walter Cronkite speaks an average, educated English doesn't mean everybody

In search of the persisting variations in regional pronunciation and words, Prof. Cassidy's enterprise has spent about $800,000 over the last five years -much of it from the United States Office of Education and the University of Wisconsin. He has sent field workers (including himself) to 1,002 communities (in all 50 states) bearing questionnaires with 1,397

The communities were chosen his name a nametake; to one as representative, urban and rural, with informants of different races and occupations. Ideal informants were those who still lived in their birthplace; the choice spirit was that of an old woman in Buckingham, Va.,

who dismissed any thought of neighboring villages, let slone far-off states. "I hope the next move I ever have to make will be in a pine box," she said.

"What du you call a piece of land that's often wet, and Alabamian a whirlpool was a twirlpool, and in New York City people were forever bunking into each other.

Determined to get such speaking parts out of the Univac computer and onto the page by 1976, Professor Cassidy wrote the governor of every state a letter soliciting funds for the dictionary. He spiced each appeal with examples of the state's regionalisms.

For George C. Wellace of

A Regional Glossary

Here are some samples of the way people speak in different parts of the country, as gathered by the compilers of the Dictionary of American Regional English:

is best man at a wedding.

Prof. Cassidy informed the governor of New Hampshire that a gripper is a very cold morning, Gov. William T. Cahill of New Jersey learned that a gravy sermon is one that appeals to the emotions, and that a bucket of light is not moonshine but kerosene.

Most of the governors sent sympathetic replies. Only then-Gov. John Bell Williams of Mississippi saw a chance to brushwhip his scholarly informant with his own learning. "I am a life-long resident of the state of Mississippi," wrote his excellency, "and I am not familiar with 'characteristically Mississippi words,' which were listed in your letter."

Neither Gov. Williams nor any of his colleagues in the 49 other great and sovereign states yielded so much as a levy CMary-land's word for "a bit," twelve and one-half cents) to finish editing the dictionary, but the lexicographers worked on

Graduate students at tape recorders tried to pierce each pause for meaning, and others prepared more information for computer maws. The vision of immortalizing the variations on each them goes back a long way—through H. L. Mencken and the founding of the quarterly "American Speech" 47 years ago, to the first meeting of the American Dialect Society in 1899.

The society has been meeting ever since. "They plugged along for 70 years, and every time some editor was appointed he said he hadn't got enough stuff," said Prof. Cassidy.

In 1963 he argued that the job could be done it someone full-time was in charge, and if there was enough money. He was made editor, and now he says he has the stuff but he needs
